The world is a smaller place.

Industries have been deregulated, monopolies broken and competition encouraged. Communications technologies from the telephone to the e-mail have shrunk the world.

As the world's second largest exporting nation, Germany is at the heart of this process and continues to be Singapore's largest European trade partner. Singapore is an important centre of the international economy but depends to a large extent on foreign investments. With its more than 600 companies operating in and from Singapore, Germany is an important player in the island-state.

Globalisation has not excluded the legal profession. Knowledge of other legal systems and inter-action between lawyers from different jurisdictions are recognised as essential factors contributing to an attractive business location. The legal profession in both Germany and Singapore has undergone radical changes during the last few years to keep up with the changing world of business. German lawyers are increasingly confronted with Anglo-American practices and the past months have seen consolidation amongst smaller firms and a wave of mergers with mainly English law firms to prepare for the challenges ahead. Regional legal services are in demand in Singapore and the Government has allowed joint law ventures and alliances with international law firms to facilitate cross-border transactions and to better understand different legal cultures and practices.

The Association adds to this development. In July 2000, German lawyers interested in Singapore and its legal system and Singapore lawyers with similar interest in Germany founded the German-Singaporean Lawyers' Association. The Association, registered with the Berlin Registrar of Societies as "Deutsch-Singapurische Juristen-Vereinigung e.V.", has more than 40 members from the legal profession of both countries but is open to other individuals and organisations as well. Singapore Minister for Law and Foreign Affairs H.E. Prof. S. Jayakumar, Ambassador Prof. Walter Woon, Ambassador Volker Schlegel and Prof. Rauschnig, founding father of the German Law Student Exchange Programme with the National University of Singapore, are honorary members of the Association.

The Association is the first of its kind in Singapore, although Germany has similar bilateral tie-ups with several other countries, including China, Korea and Thailand. The German-British lawyers' association, for example, celebrated its 30th anniversary last year. The Association aims to promote deeper knowledge and understanding of Singapore law in Germany and of German and EU law in Singapore, enhance co-operation and facilitate business relations between both countries, support a regular exchange of law students and pupils, and generally offer a forum for contacts between German and Singaporean lawyers. The Association will closely co-operate with the Law Society of Singapore and the Law Faculty of the National University of Singapore (NUS).

The founding of the Association marks an important step in the history of relations between the two countries in the legal field. It follows a tradition of academic exchange initiated in 1979 by Prof. S. Jayakumar, then Dean of the Law Faculty of NUS, and Prof. Dietrich Rauschnig from the University of Göttingen. Since then, almost 70 German law students have spent a four-month term at NUS. A number of distinguished Singaporean lawyers have done research at German universities and law institutes in the past decades.

This conference brings together members from the legal profession in Singapore and Germany, offering a unique platform for exchange, learning, understanding and forging closer relationships. The speakers and panelists include internationally recognised experts in arbitration and mediation, business EU and international law.

We are confident that a successful conference lies ahead of us and hope to welcome many members and interested colleagues in Singapore.
